

Stem cells in the heart

We have found progenitor cells in the adult mammalian heart. They are labelled here using a green fluorescent stain. These cells are able to give rise to all mature cell types that make up the heart: the contractile cells (cardiomyocytes) and blood vessels.

Image: Georgina Ellison